

An Analysis of An Institutional Analysis of Art

George Dickie's Institutional Theory of Art.

It is evident from George Dickie's argument in "Art and the Aesthetic" that he thinks his Institutional Theory is defensible. However I intend to argue that it is indefensible. My reasons for arguing the case for the indefensibility of the theory are: (i) because of its circularity; (ii) its reliance upon a privileged cognate to represent the artwork, to make decisions about what is and what is not art; (iii) its failure to distinguish good from bad art; and (iv) because the criteria's artwork are somewhat suspect. George Dickie formulated the institutional theory of art in which he explains how such varied things as a pile of bricks, a labelled 'fountain' etc., can be considered works of art. According to his theory the 'artworld' – Dickie uses the term artworld to refer to the broad social network of systems consisting of theatre, painting, sculpture, literature and so on) in which works of art have their place – has the authority to confer the 'work of art' on objects. In effect, it is the artworld's prerogative to decide which objects will be considered to have aesthetic value.

The theory states that there are two things which objects to be considered as works of art must have in common. First, that they all be artifacts; that is, I been evoked on to some extent by human beings. Dickie uses the term 'artifact' in quite a loose way, according to him even a piece of driftwood picked up somewhere could be considered an artifact if someone displayed it in an art gallery. Placing it in a gallery in order to get people to look at it in a certain way, count as working on it.

"Natural objects which become works of art in the classificatory sense are artifactualized without the use of tools – artifactuality is conferred on the object rather worked on it. This means that natural objects which become works of art acquire their artifactuality at the same time that the status of candidate for appreciation conferred on them."

This definition of an artifact is so loose as to add nothing important to the concept of art. Second, and more importantly, these artifacts have all had the candidacy for appreciation conferred upon them by some member or members (a privileged cognate) of the art world, such as a gallery owner, a public artist etc. In every case someone with the appropriate authority has had the privilege of conferring this status upon the artifacts.

Dickie argues that an artifact can acquire the status of candidate for appreciation in a way similar to that in which a person achieves the certification of being qualified for office, or more simply in the manner in which two persons acquire the status of common-law marriage. This may sound as if it means that we are simply those things which certain people call works of art. However, the members of the artworld need not go through any sort of ceremony of naming a work of art, they need not even actually call it a work of art; it is enough that they treat the work as art. The institutional theory, then, says that some in and groups in our society have an ability to change any artifact into a work of art by the simple action of conferring status upon it. This may take the form something "art", but more often amounts to publishing, exhibiting, or performing the work. This raises the question, from whence does this privileged cognate make such decisions as to which artifacts should have status conferred upon them, gain their empowerment? Surely only the artists themselves are best confer status upon an artifact, thus transforming it into a work of art. But I would even question this in some circumstances, as so many, so-called, work simply utilitarian objects put on display.

The institutional theory is circular, and Dickie, although he does see the problem of circularity, does not think that it is viciously circular, as is evident in his statement that:

"Admittedly, in a sense the definition is circular, but it is not viciously circular... because the whole account in which the definition is embedded contains a great information about the artworld."

What the theory says is that art is whatever a certain group of privileged people choose to call art. This sounds like some form of linguistic gymnastics we have disturbing political implications, if only people from a particular social class are endowed with the privilege to make such a choice. A defender of the might argue against this, that the requirement that the work of art be an artifact, and the restriction of who is able to confer the status of candidacy for app upon an it, are enough to give some content to the theory. If this is so, we need a more detailed account of precisely who is part of the artworld. Yet even know who had this privilege of conferring status, and why they were entitled to it, we still would want to know why they choose one object rather than another considered as a work of art.

Dickie does not refute Ted Cohen's claim that an object must be capable of being appreciated in order for it to be possible to confer the status of candidacy upon it; i.e. if something cannot be appreciated it cannot become a work of art. Therefore, we also need to know what kind of appreciation is
