

CAUSES OF ANTISOCIAL PERSONALITY DISORDER

Genetic Factors

Genetic predispositions account for about 50% of antisocial behavior variance. Variations in dopamine and serotonin systems contribute to impulsivity and aggression, core features of ASPD.

Environmental Factors

Adverse childhood experiences, such as abuse, neglect, or exposure to violence, increase the risk of ASPD. These environments teach disregard for social norms and reduce empathy, although parenting alone is not the sole cause.

Neurological Factors

Reduced volume in brain areas like the prefrontal cortex and amygdala impairs empathy, moral reasoning, and impulse control. Altered brain activity affects emotional processing and understanding consequences of actions.
