John Rothenstein,1966 Antonello Da Messina and His Workshop Thomas Skorupa,2015 Antonello da Messina ca 1430 1479 has long been famous for his mastery of the technique of oil painting for his role in the dissemination of the Netherlandish style in northern Italy and for introducing new artistic impulses in Venice in the mid 1470s Following his premature death in 1479 his son Jacobello took over the workshop and with three of his cousins Antonio and Pietro de Saliba and Salvo d Antonio continued painting Antonello s compositions for a northern Italian audience from their Venice base for the next decade and a half In the mid 1490s they returned to Sicily where they continued to paint in the master s style well into the sixteenth century The workshop production is a true indication of the continuing positive reception of Antonello s work after the master s death This study examines the four members of the workshop drawing from the contracts wills records of payments and paintings as source material to reconstruct the activity of these artists in both northern and southern Italy The study focuses on the relationship between prototypes and copies during the workshop s Venetian period with examinations of two series of small devotional paintings The catalogue raisonne which includes detailed entries of all known works by the four members of Antonello da Messina s workshop is the first complete overview of this workshop s production Thomas Skorupa studied art history German literature and comparative literature in New York and Berlin He earned his doctorate at the Freie Universitat Berlin with this dissertation He works as an editor in Berlin Antonello Da
