Christensen, 2021-09-23 In 1919 the Ford Motor Company the world s largest automobile manufacturer decided to make a small Nordic country its bridgehead to continental Europe Denmark was a good choice geographically and because of the country s favourable customs policy During the 1920s Ford s iconic Model T was assembled in Copenhagen with large quantities exported from there to most of north eastern Europe The innovative manufacturing technology employed in Copenhagen was the same as that used in Ford s American assembly plants and the Copenhagen plant was actually designed by Albert Kahn the architect behind Ford s famous Highland Park factory in Detroit Michigan The Danish Ford Motor Company successfully continued production throughout the recession of the 1930s the German occupation of Denmark in 1940 1945 and the Cold War and economic boom of the 1950s The Copenhagen factory closed in 1966 obliged to give way to Ford s larger operations elsewhere in Europe Henry Ford s pioneering principles of mass production went beyond mere technology The large scale serial manufacturing of uniform products was also a way of fulfilling his vision of an affluent consumer society But as Fordism was relocated across the Atlantic the rigorous discipline and fast paced work routines applied in Detroit were challenged by local traditions shifting market conditions and most notably a labour movement that was far more powerful than its American counterpart Between Denmark and Detroit offers a detailed history of the Danish Ford Motor Company but the book also has a wider scope elucidating the concept of Fordism and how it was transformed by its move across the Atlantic Lars K Christensen holds a PhD in history He is the author of several publications on labour history and industrial heritage Presently he is head of research and cultural heritage at the ROMU museums group Whitaker's Books in Print ,1998 Autowork Robert Asher,Ronald Edsforth,1995-01-01 An anthology of original essays on the history of work experience in automobile factories from 1913 to the present Library Acquisitions List Martin P.
