THE NEW ARTS AND TECH CULTURES

[illegible]

Some things they did were very much the same as in today. They developed advanced calendars, mathematics, and record keeping. Family life was important and children were well-educated. The Mayas invented a ball game perhaps similar to our basketball. The Mayas and Aztecs grew many of the same fruits, vegetables and flowers as enjoy today and enjoyed drinks made from chocolate.

There were joyful and unpleasant aspects to these rallies. A strong division existed between the rich and the poor, and the poor had to do service to the rich. Warriors were trained to invade and conquer with brutal fighting. They believed that human sacrifice and blood-letting pleased their gods. The entire land where they were not always well treated.

Archaeologists learned about these people by studying the remains of buildings, and their art and symbols. Since the Maya had very different European names, there are no first-hand records. However, European explorers did record information about the Maya and Aztec, so their culture is understood less they lived. European temples and pyramids still stand and we can visit these ruins in Mexico, and we can see artifacts of their ancient civilizations in museums.

Abstract

ANALYSIS The geographic diversity of what are called southern Mexico, Southwest and Yucatan, and northern Yucatan and El Salvador. This area is made up of three different geographical regions. Life in each area was slightly different, influenced by the geography. Along the Pacific coast people lived in highland valleys of volcanic mountain ranges. There were many large cities, making the land good for agriculture. Further north was mountainous, often steeply and filled with animals. There lived the people. Inland and mountainous, and many small cities where farmers were used for protection of products. The mountainous Pacific coastlands were very dry, hot, lying flat, with volcanic forests. There the Maya lived in small cities. The mountainous Pacific coastlands were very dry, hot, lying flat, with volcanic forests. There the Maya lived in small cities. The mountainous Pacific coastlands were very dry, hot, lying flat, with volcanic forests. There the Maya lived in small cities.
