All About Antwerp:

High Germans in the Low Countries Donald Harreld, 2004-11-01 This volume looks at the South German merchant community during Antwerp's Golden Age by examining German involvement in the social life of the city as well as by tracing merchants' commercial activities. The first section of the book considers the institutions of trade and the role Germans played in their development and how Germans interacted with other foreign merchant communities. The second section takes a wider view by tracing the commercial networks that South German merchants operated in and by quantifying South German participation in Antwerp's foreign trade. The Official Railway Guide, 1876 The New Cambridge Modern History: Volume 2, The Reformation, 1520-1559 G. R. Elton, 1990 This second edition describes the open conflicts of the Reformation from Luther's first challenge to the uneasy peace of the 1560s. (Complete) Friedrich Schiller, 2020-09-28 Of those important political events which make the sixteenth century to take rank among the brightest of the world's epochs the foundation of the freedom of the Netherlands appears to me one of the most remarkable. If the glittering exploits of ambition and the pernicious lust of power claim our admiration how much more so should an event in which oppressed humanity struggled for its noblest rights where with the good cause unwonted powers were united and the resources of resolute despair triumphed in unequal contest over the terrible arts of tyranny. Great and encouraging is the reflection that there is a resource left us against the arrogant usurpations of despotic power that its best contrived plans against the liberty of mankind may be frustrated that resolute opposition can weaken even the outstretched arm of tyranny and that heroic perseverance can eventually exhaust its fearful resources. Never did this truth affect me so sensibly as in tracing the history of that memorable rebellion which forever severed the United Netherlands from the Spanish Crown. Therefore I thought it not unworth the while to attempt to exhibit to the world this grand memorial of social union in the hope that it may awaken in the breast of my reader a spirit stirring consciousness of his own powers and give a new and irrefragible example of what in a good cause men may both dare and venture and what by union they may accomplish. It is not the extraordinary or heroic features of this event that induce me to describe it. The annals of the world record perhaps many similar enterprises which may have been even bolder in the conception and more brilliant in the execution. Some states have fallen after a nobler struggle others have risen with more exalted strides. Nor are we here to look for eminent heroes colossal talents or those marvellous exploits which the history of past times presents in such rich abundance. Those times are gone such men are no more. In the soft lap of refinement we have suffered the energetic powers to become enervate which those ages called into action and rendered indispensable. With admiring awe we wonder at these gigantic images of the past as a feeble old man gazes on the athletic sports of youth. Not so however in the history before us. The people here presented to our notice were the most peaceful in our quarter of the globe and less capable than their neighbors of that heroic spirit which stamps a lofty character even on the most insignificant actions. The pressure of circumstances with its peculiar influence surprised them and forced a transitory greatness upon them which they never could have possessed and perhaps will never possess again. It is indeed exactly this want of heroic grandeur which renders this event peculiarly instructive and while others aim at showing the superiority of genius over chance I shall here paint a scene where necessity creates genius and accident makes heroes. If in any case it be allowable to recognize the intervention of Providence in human affairs it is certainly so in the present history its course appears so contradictory to reason and experience. Philip II the most powerful sovereign of his line whose dreaded supremacy menaced the independence of Europe whose treasures surpassed the collective wealth of all the monarchs of Christendom besides whose ambitious projects were backed by numerous and well disciplined armies whose troops hardened by long and bloody wars and confident in past victories and in the irresistible prowess of this nation were eager for any enterprise that promised glory and spoil and ready to second with prompt obedience the daring genius of their leaders this dreaded potentate here appears before us obstinately pursuing one favorite project devoting to it the untiring efforts of a long reign and bringing all these terrible resources to bear upon it but forced in the evening of his reign to abandon it here we see the mighty Philip II engaging in combat with a few weak and powerless adversaries and retiring from it at last with disgrace And with what adversaries Here a peaceful tribe of fishermen and shepherds in an almost forgotten corner of Europe which with difficulty they had rescued from the ocean the sea their profession and at once their wealth and their plague poverty with freedom their highest blessing their glory their virtue There a harmless moral commercial people revelling in the abundant fruits of thriving industry and jealous of the maintenance of laws which had proved their benefactors In the happy leisure of affluence they forsake the narrow circle of immediate wants and learn to thirst after higher and nobler gratifications The new views of truth whose benignant dawn now broke over Europe cast a fertilizing beam on this favored clime and the free burgher admitted with joy the light which oppressed and miserable slaves shut out A spirit of independence which is the ordinary companion of prosperity and freedom lured this people on to examine the authority of antiquated opinions and to break an ignominious chain But the stern rod of despotism was held suspended over them arbitrary power threatened to tear away the foundation of their happiness the guardian of their laws became their tyrant Simple in their statecraft no less than in their manners they dared to appeal to ancient treaties and to remind the lord of both Indies of the rights of nature A name decides the whole issue of things In Madrid that was called rebellion which in Brussels was simply styled a lawful remonstrance The complaints of Brabant required a prudent mediator Philip II sent an executioner The signal for war was given An unparalleled tyranny assailed both property and life The despairing citizens to whom the choice of deaths was all that was left chose the nobler one on the battle field A wealthy and luxurious nation loves peace but becomes warlike as soon as it becomes poor Then it ceases to tremble for a life which is deprived of everything that had made it desirable In an instant the contagion of rebellion seizes at once the most distant provinces trade and commerce are at a standstill the ships disappear from the harbors the artisan abandons his workshop the rustic his uncultivated fields Thousands fled to distant lands a thousand victims fell on the bloody field and fresh thousands pressed on Divine indeed must that doctrine be for which men could die so joyfully All that was wanting was the last finishing hand the enlightened enterprising spirit to seize on this great political crisis and to mould the offspring of chance into the ripe creation of wisdom William the Silent like a second Brutus devoted himself to the great cause of liberty Superior to all selfishness he resigned honorable offices which entailed on him objectionable duties and magnanimously divesting himself of all his princely dignities he descended to a state of voluntary poverty and became but a citizen of the world The cause of justice was staked upon the hazardous game of battle but the newly raised levies of mercenaries and peaceful husbandmen were unable to withstand the terrible onset of an experienced force Twice did the brave William lead his dispirited troops against the tyrant Twice was he abandoned by them but not by his courage
