How to prevent HIV

AIDS is a disease caused by HIV. HIV is a virus that attacks the immune system. It can be passed from one person to another through blood, semen, or vaginal fluids. There is no cure for HIV, but it can be managed with medication. People with HIV should take their medication every day to keep their immune system strong. They should also use condoms and avoid sharing needles. People with HIV should get tested regularly to see how their immune system is doing. If a person's immune system is weak, they may get sick more often and have more problems. It is important to know that HIV is not a death sentence. Many people live long, healthy lives with HIV. They just need to take good care of themselves and get the right treatment.
