traditionally invited irresolvable metaphysical contradictions David Bentley Hart delves deeply into the seemingly irresoluble tensions providing the first theological attempt to show how the logic of the earliest churches angelomorphic Christology is continuous with later Chalcedonian orthodoxy Hart draws on theologians from every epoch of Christian thought from Origen to Sergei Bulgakov while making free use of concepts from other spiritual traditions such as Vedanta The Light of Tabor proposes an approach to Christology that is thoroughly monistic both as regards Being and as regards nature Hart argues that the only coherent reading of the figure of Christ is one that fully embraces the essential unity of all things divine and natural through him proposing an approach to Christology that affirms classical doctrine without retaining the dualistic presuppositions that have haunted theology since the age of the great councils   The Temperance Mirror ... ,1885
