

Therapeutic Community Approach to Drug Treatment

Therapeutic communities are drug-free residential treatment programs which have adopted a hierarchical model (such as AA, Narcotics Anonymous, etc.) with increasing levels of personal and social responsibility (NIDA, 2005).<sup>1</sup> Therapeutic communities (TCs) use of the community differs from many other types of drug treatment approaches.<sup>2</sup> Staff and those in recovery are the key agents of change (NIDA, 2005).

~~~~~ According to George deLeon (1986:69):

~~~~~ The primary aims of the therapeutic community are a global change in lifestyle reflecting abstinence from illicit substances, elimination of antisocial activity, increased enjoyability, and prosocial attitudes and values.<sup>3</sup> A critical assumption in TCs is that stable recovery depends upon a successful integration of these social and psychological goals.<sup>4</sup> The rehabilitative approach, therefore, requires multidimensional influences and training that, for most clients, can only occur after an extended period of living in a 24-hour residential setting.<sup>5</sup>

~~~~~ For individuals admitted to TCs<sup>6</sup> recovery, part of their treatment<sup>7</sup> includes rehabilitation.<sup>8</sup> This includes relearning or re-establishing healthy social functioning, educational/vocational skills, positive family and community ties, values, and emotional health.<sup>9</sup> Some TC residents may have never had skills, values or ties.<sup>10</sup> These residents will have to be habilitated<sup>11</sup> or learn for the first time<sup>12</sup> these valuable social skills (NIDA, 2005).<sup>13</sup> Some people have come from a socially disadvantaged background where drug abuse was more socially acceptable.<sup>14</sup> The TC treatment perspective is such that drug abuse is a whole-person disorder and the problem is the person, not the substance itself (Abadinsky, 2004).

~~~~~ Therapeutic communities<sup>15</sup> treatment is complete.<sup>16</sup> Its purpose is to facilitate social and psychological change in individuals<sup>17</sup> (Abadinsky, 2004).<sup>18</sup> To be successful a participant must be fully invested in the program, identify with other addicts including staff, and resocialize themselves via drug abstinence.<sup>19</sup> The withdrawal process is done without the use of any other drugs<sup>20</sup> including detoxifying agents.<sup>21</sup> Negative and positive reinforcement is used.<sup>22</sup> Shaming someone who messed up or left and came back to the program is common.<sup>23</sup> All residents of the community are kept engaged in a tightly structured environment and anyone who
