Civilian Satellite Remote Sensing ,1994 Toward New Partnerships In Remote Sensing National Research Council,Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences,Space Studies Board,Steering Committee on Space Applications and Commercialization,2002-10-18 The technical scientific policy and institutional environment for conducting Earth science research has been changing rapidly over the past few decades Changes in the technical environment are due both to the advent of new types and sources of remote sensing data which have higher spatial and spectral resolution and to the development of vastly expanded capabilities in data access visualization spatial data integration and data management The scientific environment is changing because of the strong emphasis on global change research both nationally and internationally and the evolving data requirements for that research And the policy and institutional environment for the production of Earth observation data is changing with the diversification of both remote sensing data and the institutions that produce the data In this report the Space Studies Board s Steering Committee on Space Applications and Commercialization explores the implications of this changing environment examining the opportunities and challenges it presents

Space Policy in the Twenty-First Century W. Henry Lambright,2003 Though more than forty years old the space age has just begun and questions about its future abound What will replace the Space Shuttle Will the International Space Station justify its 100 billion potential cost Are asteroids real threats to Earth or just the subject of science fiction movies Will humans land on Mars Will the search for extraterrestrial life be rewarded In Space Policy in the Twenty First Century W Henry Lambright brings together ten top ranking observers of United States space exploration to address these and other issues relating to the future of the space program While the U S no longer competes with the Soviets for technological firsts they argue ideology and national image remain at the core of space policy with other factors playing subordinate roles. Reminding readers of the historical highlights, the authors pose searching questions about the priorities and applications of space science: manned vs unmanned flights and commercial access to the space enterprise. Contributors include Christopher F. Chyba (SETI Institute and Stanford University), Ronald J. Deibert (University of Toronto), Daniel H. Deudney (Johns Hopkins University), W. Henry Lambright (Syracuse University), Roger D. Launius (NASA), Karl A. Leib (Syracuse University), John M. Logsdon (George Washington University), Howard E. McCurdy (American University), Scott N. Office of Technology Assessment, 1993. Landsat and Beyond National Research Council, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Space Studies Board, Committee on Implementation of a Sustained Land Imaging Program, 2014-01-03. In 1972 NASA launched the Earth Resources Technology Satellite ERTS, now known as Landsat 1, and on February 11, 2013, launched Landsat 8. Currently, the United States has collected 40 continuous years of satellite records of land remote sensing data from satellites similar to these. Even though this data is valuable to improving many different aspects of the country, such as agriculture, homeland security, and disaster mitigation, the availability of this data for planning our nation's future is at risk. Thus, the Department of the Interior's DOI's U.S. Geological Survey (USGS) requested that the National Research Council's NRC's Committee on Implementation of a Sustained Land Imaging Program review the needs and opportunities necessary for the development of a national space-based operational land imaging capability. The committee was specifically tasked with several objectives, including identifying stakeholders and their data needs and providing recommendations to facilitate the transition from NASA's research-based series of satellites to a sustained USGS land imaging program. Landsat and Beyond: Sustaining and Enhancing the Nation's Land Imaging Program is the result of the committee's investigation. This investigation included meetings with stakeholders such as the DOI, NASA, NOAA, and commercial data providers. The report includes the committee's recommendations, information about different aspects of the program, and a section dedicated to future opportunities. Annual Report to the Congress United States Congress. Access no single word better describes the primary concern of the exploration and development of space. Every participant in space activities: civil, military, scientific, or commercial needs affordable, reliable, frequent, and flexible access to space. To Reach the High Frontier details the histories of the various space access vehicles.

developed in the United States since the birth of the space age in 1957 Each case study has been written by a specialist knowledgeable about the vehicle described and places each system in the larger context of the history of spaceflight The technical challenge of reaching space with chemical rockets the high costs associated with space launch the long lead times necessary for scheduling flights and the poor reliability of the rockets themselves show launch vehicles to be the space program s most difficult challenge

Contested Grounds Daniel H. Deudney, Richard A. Matthew, 1999-04-23 Since the end of the Cold War the relationship between international security and the environment has been subject to intensive policy concern scholarly debate and research Contested Grounds brings together many of the best known researchers on this emerging topic as they present sharply conflicting views on the relationship between the environment and security and conflict The book puts the contemporary debate in historical and theoretical perspective by demonstrating the important but overlooked role that environmental factors have placed in historical developments and in earlier geopolitical theories The contributors present diverse and often conflicting answers to three questions What are the relationships between environmental change degradation and protection and traditional natural security concepts and organizations How useful are security concepts and organizations in mobilizing political responses to environmental problems What role do environmental factors play in stimulating international conflict and cooperation In depth case studies on transboundary resource issues are explored as well as the implications of Chinese environmental decay for political conflict and the use of military satellites for environmental monitoring Contributors include Ken Butts Simon Dalby Daniel Deudney Ronald J Deibert Michel Frederick Jack Goldstone Thomas Homer Dixon Miriam Lowi Richard Matthew and Eric Stern
