A fast paced gritty and atmospheric crime novel set on the tough streets of Glasgow 1946 Glasgow 1946 The last time Douglas Brodie came home it was 1942 and he was a dashing young warrior in a kilt Now the war is over but victory's wine has soured and Brodie's back in Scotland to try and save childhood friend Hugh Donovan from the gallows Everyone thought Hugh was dead shot down in the war Perhaps it would have been kinder if he had been killed The man who returns from the war is unrecognizable mutilated horribly burned Hugh keeps his own company only venturing out for heroin to deaden the pain of his wounds When a local boy is found raped and murdered there is only one suspect Hugh claims he's innocent but a mountain of evidence says otherwise Despite the hideousness of the crime ex policeman Brodie feels compelled to try and help his one time friend Working with advocate Samantha Campbell Brodie trawls the mean streets of the Gorbals and the green hills of western Scotland in their search for the truth What they find is an unholy alliance of troublesome priests corrupt coppers and Glasgow's deadliest razor gang happy to slaughter to protect their dark and dirty secrets As time runs out for the condemned man the murder tally of innocents starts to climb When Sam Campbell disappears it's the last straw for Brodie and he reverts to his wartime role as a trained killer It's them or him The Hanging Shed is the word of mouth hit that is leaving its fellow thrillers in its wake Guardian
