enthusiastically the more knowledge will be gained and hopefully more lives will be saved Lessons from PFI and other projects Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Committee of Public Accounts, 2011-09 There are legitimate concerns being expressed about the continuing financial cost of PFI for public organisations such as NHS Trusts The Committee believes that some of the Government's case for using PFI has not been based on robust analysis but on ill founded comparisons and invalid assumptions The costs and benefits identified in business cases need to be revisited after contracts are signed and periodically thereafter to inform future procurement decisions In particular the Committee's view is that the Government should revisit the tax assumptions it builds into the cost and benefit case for PFI Taxpayers could get a much better deal from PFI and the taxpayer's position is also made worse by poor transparency of investor and contract information alongside patchy public sector commercial skills The Treasury and departments should make full use of existing contractual rights of access and further investor information to increase transparency and find ways for taxpayers to get a share of the profits made by PFI contractors At present PFI deals look better value for the private sector than for the taxpayer Private sector funds have built up portfolios of PFI projects from the large market that government has created benefiting from potential economies of scale without any obligation to share such volume gains Government in contrast has a fragmented approach and is not making use of its bulk buying power The Treasury is seeking further efficiency savings but achieving any savings on existing contracts will depend on voluntary agreements with investors and suppliers

Department of Health Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Committee of Public Accounts,2013-03-22 The NHS has achieved its financial savings target but this has in large part come from freezing wages and there is concern that other savings are being achieved by rationing patients access to certain treatments These include cataract surgery and hip and knee replacements These procedures are described as being of low clinical value but they can make a real difference to a patient s quality of life Furthermore the finances of some trusts are fragile and there is a risk they may resort to simple cost cutting rather than finding genuine efficiency savings The NHS must fundamentally change the way that healthcare is provided to secure the level of savings needed in the future for example by moving services out of hospitals and into the community The Committee is not satisfied that the Department and the NHS Commissioning Board is doing enough to help the NHS transform services Local people are understandably resistant when proposals are made to close their local hospital or reduce the range of services it provides It is down to the Department to make a clear case for change from the patient s point of view demonstrating the benefits in terms of the quality and safety of care as well as cost savings Although the Department reported that the NHS made savings in 2011 12 of 5.8 billion virtually all of that year s forecast of 5.9 billion that data is not fully reliable Only 60% of the savings it claimed to have made during 2011 12 could be substantiated using national data Improving Patient Care by Reducing the Risk of Hospital Acquired Infection Great Britain: Parliament:

House of Commons: Committee of Public Accounts,2005-06-23 The best available estimates suggest that annually there are at least 300 000 cases of hospital acquired infection causing 5 000 deaths and costing the NHS 1 billion This report follows on from a report by the Comptroller and Auditor General HC 876 2003 04 ISBN 0102929157 and examines the progress made by the Department of Health and NHS trusts in reducing the risks It looks at three main areas the extent and impact of hospital acquired infection improving knowledge of and compliance with good infection control practice improving infection control systems and management processes The conclusion is that progress has been patchy with a lack of urgency on several key issues such as ward cleanliness and hand hygiene Progress has also been hampered by a lack of data a national mandatory surveillance programme and evidence of the effectiveness of different intervention strategies House of Commons - Health Committee: After Francis: Making A Difference - HC 657 Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Health Committee,2013-09-18 The NHS needs to be an organization in which an open dialogue about care quality is part of the natural culture of the organization not a duty which only arises in cases of service failure Robert Francis made 290 recommendations in his report but in truth they boil down to just one that the culture of doing the system s business is pervasive in parts of the NHS and has to change Many who raise their concerns in the NHS at present risk serious consequences for their employment and professional status But disciplinary procedures professional conduct hearings and employment tribunals are not the proper place for honestly held concerns about patient safety and care quality to be aired constructively The NHS standard contract imposes a duty of candour on all NHS providers This is an essential principle but it is not adequately understood or applied It should mean that all providers create a culture which is routinely open both with their patients and their commissioners The same principle should apply to commissioners so that they are routinely open and accountable to local communities The Health Committee recommended this approach in 2011 and repeats that now It should be a prime role of the CQC to encourage the development of this culture within care providers and of NHS England to develop the same culture within commissioners The Health Committee will in future work closely with the Professional Standards Authority to develop the accountability process for professional regulators in healthcare
