Haynes, Jocelyn G. Millar, 2012-12-06 Identification of chemicals that affect the naturally occurring interactions between organisms requires sophisticated chemical techniques such as those documented in volume 1 in combination with effective bioassays Without an effective bioassay the identification becomes akin to looking for a needle in a haystack but without any idea of what a needle looks like To a large extent serbiochemical identifications must be driven by bioassays The design of bioassays for use in chemical ecology is governed by the sometimes conflicting objectives of ecological relevance and the need for simplicity Bioassay design should be based on observations of the interactions between organisms in their natural context a theme that appears throughout this volume As a result this volume is as much about ecology and behavior as it is about specific methods It is impossible to design a relevant bioassay whether it is simple or complex without understanding at least the fundamentals of how chemical cues or signals mediate the interaction in nature Thus the development of bioassay methods must be driven by an understanding of ecology and a knowledge of the natural history of the organisms under study Given such an understanding it is often possible to design assays that are both ecologically relevant and easy to perform
