

by Satish Chandra and Fukazawa. The kind of stratifications that existed in the other regions were not prevalent here. He, therefore, warns his readers against any generalizations on the basis of data from elsewhere.

Assessing the trade patterns and the character of the non-agricultural productions in the suba, Trivedi highlights the strength and critical importance of the economic linkages of suba Agra with various regions of the Mughal empire and the regions abroad. The suba being strategically located, the major trade routes passed through it for Central Asia and West Asia. Within the subcontinent, the suba was integral to a variety of economic activities, whether it was transportation and communication, production and procurement of merchandise or the transactions of complex financial institutions. But, while the suba may have prospered in the agricultural and commercial sector, it could not compete with the subas of Bengal, Bihar and Gujarat in craft production. Such scarcities or laxities, the author argues, did not, however, distort the urban character of suba Agra. Whatever it did not or could not produce, it could procure from the other regions.

The book is significant for the alternative argument that it provides and the challenge that it poses to the notion of the centralized Mughal state. In several places, however, the style assumes the tone of a narrative and the descriptions are rather overwhelming. The value of the book could have been further enhanced had the author widened his period of study. One, of course, can see the rationale of choosing the period 1580–1707 (considered to be a phase of culmination of prosperity and centralization by some scholars of Mughal history), particularly when the author is re-thinking to the notion of a centralized state structure under the Mughals. Nonetheless, had he surveyed the pre-Akbar period and gone beyond 1707, he could have questioned the notion of two chronological points of focus in the Mughal empire—Akbar and Aurangzeb, and perhaps consolidated the argument that all politics and economy did not collapse in 1707.

The book is well documented with maps and appendices at the end of each chapter. There are a few typographical errors, but in view of the rich data and the empirical value of the book, they can be dismissed as insignificant. The book should interest all scholars of economic history and those engaged in regional history.

Francis Xavier Clooney,2010-06-03 Gandhi, Women, and the National Movement, 1920-47 Anup Taneja,2005 This Book Critically Analyses The Success Achieved By Gandhi In Mobilizing Women On A Mass Scale For The Cause Of The Country S Independence Women in Ochre Robes Meena Khandelwal,2012-02-01 Meena Khandelwal offers an engaging and intimate portrait of extraordinary Hindu women in India who wear ochre robes signifying their renunciation of marriage and family for lives of celibacy asceticism and spiritual discipline While the largely male Hindu ascetic tradition of sannyasa renders its initiates ritually dead to their previous identities the women portrayed here are very much alive They struggle with and joke about the tensions and ironies of living in the world while trying not to be of it Khandelwal juxtaposes the common refrain that in renunciation there is no male and female with arguments that underscore the importance of gender In exploring these apparent contradictions she brings together worldly and otherworldly values within renunciation and argues that these create tensions that are at once emotional social and philosophical

D. Gaur,2008 Papers presented at a seminar held at Chandigarh during 1 2 February 2005 Devotional Islam in Contemporary South Asia Michel Boivin,Remy Delage,2015-12-22 The Muslim shrine is at the crossroad of many processes involving society and culture It is the place where a saint often a Sufi is buried and it works as a main social factor with the power of integrating or rejecting people and groups and as a mirror reflecting the intricacies of a society The book discusses the role of popular Islam in structuring individual and collective identities in contemporary South Asia It identifies similarities and differences between the worship of saints and the pattern of religious attendance to tombs and mausoleums in South Asian Sufism and Shi ism Inspired by new advances in the field of ritual and pilgrimage studies the book demonstrates that religious gatherings are spaces of negotiation and redefinitions of religious identity and of the notion of sainthood Drawing from a large corpus of vernacular and colonial sources as well as the register of popular literature and ethnographic observation the authors describe how religious identities are co constructed through the management of rituals and are constantly renegotiated through discourses and religious practices By enabling students researchers and academics to critically understand the complexity of religious places within the world of popular and devotional Islam this geographical re mapping of Muslim religious gatherings in contemporary South Asia contributes to a new understanding of South Asian and Islamic Studies Cosmopolitan Political Thought Farah Godrej,2011-08-01 Cosmopolitan Political Thought asks the question of what it might mean for the very practices of political theorizing to be cosmopolitan It suggests that such a vision of political theory is intimately linked to methodological questions about what is commonly called comparative political theory namely the turn beyond ideas and modes of inquiry determined by traditional Western scholarship It is therefore an argument for applying the idea of cosmopolitanism understood in a particular way to the discipline of political theory itself As Farah Godrej argues there are four crucial components of this cosmopolitan intervention the texts under analysis the methods for interpreting non Western texts and ideas the application of these ideas across geographical and cultural boundaries and the deconstruction of Eurocentrism In order to be genuinely cosmopolitan Godrej states political theorists must reflect on their perspectives inside and outside various traditions and immerse themselves in foreign ideas languages histories and cultures ultimately relocating themselves within their disciplinary homes The result will be a serious challenge to accepted solutions to political life
